

Guided Tour of The University of Cincinnati

The University of Cincinnati provided excellent tour guides for a walk through of the campus. We started off at the admissions office and were split up into groups made up of major preferences. I was in the group of business and engineering students. We walked around the campus talking about the campus life and asking what life on campus was like. Our tour guide was a business management student, so we were focusing on the business school. The guide took us through each major hall and showed us inside one of the multiple dorm tower. He explained the meal plan options and bragged about the beautiful architecture around the campus. Getting the chance to see the rec center, libraries and inside the business school were very important to me. After my general tour I had signed up for a presentation from the business school admissions office. We watched a slideshow presentation they put together and afterward I talked to one of the business students and got a lot of important questions answered.

The University of Cincinnati was just another college that I applied to before I visited the campus in person. I fell more and more in love with each step I took. The feel of campus is very heartwarming and welcoming. I had a very good tour group and really enjoyed talking to the tour guide about the school and what he does to be a part of the student body. The dorms and rec center impressed me, as well as the business school presentation. I had a lot of questions and was worried about the quality of their business program's capabilities. After the presentation was over I sat down and talked to a staff member and a current business student. They both helped answer questions I had and that made me feel even better about the school. I absolutely love the University of Cincinnati and hope I get the chance to become a bearcat next fall.
