

Landmarks of University of Cincinnati

This is the Steger Center. This is home to many of the clubs and social organizations at UC. The school Barnes and Noble can be found inside. Many students come here for books or other studying materials. This is a very important building not only because of its academic and social importance, but it also has one of the three campus Starbucks inside.

The rec center at UC is among the highest ranking rec centers in the country. It is not only known for its great athletic capabilities, but its incredible design. The building was designed by a group of architect and design students. The gym has a massive basketball court, weight equipment, cardio equipment, and an olympic sized swimming pool. I plan to participate in the annual battleship game next year.

Baldwin Hall is home to the school of engineering. This picture is taken from the front, but from the back the building looks like an engine. I love the architecture all around campus, but Baldwin Hall stood out from the rest. The University of Cincinnati has a great engineering program.

This building hosts all of the foreign language courses. I am thinking about studying German as a possible minor, so I may spend a decent amount of time here. All of the large seminar classes are also held here.

Langsam Library is the main library on campus. There is a total of nine libraries at the student's disposal. Langsam is a general library whereas the other eight libraries are directed towards specific colleges and majors. My cousin is a current UC student and said "Langsam is where all the cool people go to study and drink overpriced coffee."

The University of Cincinnati is very well known for their beautiful buildings all across campus. This is DAAP, or the college of art and design. The students here get the chance to design new buildings on campus from time to time and it makes for amazing career practice. I personally love the look of DAAP.

Nippert Stadium is not only home to Bearcat Football, but also the new MLS soccer team FC Cincinnati. I am a huge soccer fan and can't wait to go to a couple games! The stadium is built into the middle of campus. Also unlike most stadiums, Nipper is built into the ground instead of built from the ground up.

Fifth Third Arena is where the basketball team practices and plays. Basketball is the most popular sport at UC. The arena is going to be rebuilt in the next year. I hope I get a chance to go to a game as a Bearcat before Fifth Third Arena is rebuilt.
