

Forensics Investigator Career Profile

A Forensics investigator is someone who always is ready for the job and must be ready to be called into work. Someone who will work in this career should have a strong stomach; there can be some nasty things that happen in this line of work. You must originate as a “beat cop,” or a cop in the force. A person with this job should be expected to advance in the career by not only solving crimes, but also by doing a phenomenal job of solving the crime. There aren’t many advancements in title or pay. The highest advancement that can be given is of chief detective. Some skills that are required for this job are good communication skills as well as great math skills. A good worker for this job works very well under pressure, and is always ready for something to happen.

