

Performing Managerial Tasks

Here is a manager at a local Home Depot. He not only works on making sure his employees are doing their jobs, but he also does some of the manual labor himself. Being a higher-up in a company doesn't always mean you work on paper work and computers. It means you help the store run in an efficient way with your team.

Here is the same manager working on some of the more formal tasks. He is required to make sure that his store is making the amount of money to keep his store on track with their sales goals. This is sometimes tedious but it helps to let the company know if his store is doing well or if there is room for improvement.
