

Picture and Daily Responsibilities of a Music Educator

The daily tasks of a band director can be very tedious. One daily task of a band director is conducting music in the class every day. There are often distractions in the classroom that can make this job hard and he/she still has to get all of the knowledge of how to play the music out to the students. The number of students in this classroom is often greater than those in a normal educator's classroom and the band director has to work with every section to make the music come together for an upcoming performance. This class is often more about the students than the teacher. A band director can not play their instrument for them, the director must do his/her best to lead them to success. A responsibility of a band director is to think ahead and to think on his/her feet.
