

Tools for Histopathology

A cryostat is used to keep substances at cryogenic (extremely cold) temperatures.

A tissue processor is used to prepare tissue samples for analysis by fixing, staining, dehydrating, or decalcifying them.

A digital scanner is used in the same way as an x-ray to examine the body in more detail and to be able to see what is going on without having to perform an autopsy first.