

Wright State University Tour

I went on a guided tour to Wright State University. It was such a beautiful campus and great experience. We went to some of the shops and cafes that Wright State has and the the girl who was our tour guide told us about the awesome meal plan offered to students. We also walked to the dorms and discovered they have a big selection of dorm rooms to choose from; I've decided on the double deluxe. We all got to go in a couple of the buildings where the classes were held, and the outside had many students walking all around campus which was nice to see that everything was in close range of each other.

On the tour to Wright State University, I learned a lot of new and exciting new things about the campus and what building my classes would be held in. I learned that there are underground tunnels that were used as the underground railroad for the slaves that escaped; it leads to every building besides the dorm rooms for safety purposes. It's great for the winter time so you don't have to walk in the freezing cold and snow. I learned a little about the Social Work program they have at WSU and I know it's held in the Liberal Arts building and that it's first come, first serve type of classes. WSU is a division 1 school in athletics, but they do not have football. But there are a lot of student organizations from Academic to Greek to Religious. Wright State is a decently cheap school; if I lived on campus, which I plan to do, it will be about $19,556 without scholarships involved. They also have a Multicultural class I get to take since it's a Liberal Art requirement. It's pretty cool because Monroe offers a Multicultural class as an elective, and I got to take that class. I'm excited to say I'm going to Wright State University and I'm ready to begin my life.
