

Tommy-Career Profile Of a Physical Therapist

A socially active person is the best kind of person for a Physical Therapy career. Physical therapists teach patients how to prevent or manage their injury so that they will achieve good long term health benefits. PTs examine each individual and develop a plan, using treatment techniques to promote the ability to move, reduce pain, restore function, etc.. If you enjoy helping people better themselves and watch people recover fully from injuries or even helping someone better their daily lives then this is a career for you. You can start off in a practice that is already open and eventually open your own if you want too.
