Wright State Tour

I've gone on two tours at Wright State. One in August and the other in late October. The first thing we did was sit through a presentation about the school, its history, and what it has to offer for you as a student. After the presentation ended, the tour began. The tour began by leaving the student admission and office building and headed into the tunnels. The entire campus is connected by underground tunnels, which is pretty live. We went through all the buildings on campus including housing. The housing options they have are all pretty cool. They have one person, two person, and three person dorm options. You also aren't required to live on campus even during your freshman year. Their cafeteria is also pretty large and has a lot of options. The library has a starbucks. But all in all, Wright State has a lot to offer and has a pretty nice campus.

I enjoyed the visit. It seems like they have a lot to offer students, and the campus is nice. The housing options are also nice. Not being required to live on campus is a huge plus to some people too, The tunnel system is also dope, so traveling through that to get to class in the winter and on rainy days is awesome.
